Carroll Morrison Named 2017 Educator of the Year

Notre Dame Principal, Dr. Carroll Morrison, has been named educator of the year by North Central West Virginia Media. Morrison said, "It is a humbling experience and I was very surprised. The newspaper informed me that I was the first private school educator to win the award." Morrison initially worked at Notre Dame in the early 1980s as a mathematics teacher, counselor, and the coach of two state champion cheerleading teams before returning as the Principal in 1998. She was awarded the Bishop's Cross in 2016 by Bishop Michael Bransfield which is the highest honor in West Virginia Catholic Education. Morrison lives in Bridgeport with her husband David and has three children who all graduated from Notre Dame: Elizabeth Grey '05, Kelly '06, and Chad '15. She said, "I loved having my own children in the school, even if they didn't like having their Mom as Principal. I have loved being at Notre Dame and consider all of the students my family. I care for every single one of them like they are my own children."

Instagram proving to be popular

During a discussion about how to improve Notre Dame High School's overall social media reach, Victoria Simon, a 2012 graduate, told advancement director, Ian McAra, "You have to get Instagram." Simon immediately set up the popular photo sharing app for Notre Dame and a few days later an account was implemented for St. Mary's. McAra said, "I was missing a communications tool for young parents, recent graduates, and current students. They weren't necessarily reading print newsletters, and while many of them had Facebook accounts, they were not using them with anywhere near the frequency of Instagram. Incorporating Instagram into our communications has allowed us to quickly tell a story in pictures which is the way young people are consuming more information." ## Irish Gazette Off to a Great Start

The Irish Gazette, a student run newspaper, was launched at the beginning of the 2017-2018 school year. The venture was brought to life by Julia Manley, a senior at the school, who is interested in a career in the journalism field. Manley approached Principal Carroll Morrison and asked if she could start a school newspaper. Manley presented Dr. Morrison with an example of what the newspaper would look like and a class was implemented. Five students enrolled in the class and the Irish Gazette was formed. Nick Farrell, who was already teaching the broadcast journalism class, agreed to be the advisor. The five students generate story ideas and then assignments are given covering school news, sports, and special features. The students have now released several editions of the newspaper which is distributed through the school's website. Manley said, "I was excited about being part of starting the project and that news would be released from a student point of view." The newspaper can be viewed by clicking the Irish Gazette link at notredamewv.org.
